Yonder Woman

≡ A word from the choreographer

Intentionally exposing themselves to the public gaze, two B-girls enter their assigned experimental space. Intent on presenting the spectator-observer with the image of a heroine, they succumb to the requirements of the performance they feel is expected of them. Dressed in tailored jackets and beanies, they invent a virtual labyrinth waymarked with goals and obstacles, through which they make their staggered progress, amid an interplay between contact, tension and the act of overtaking. Plunged into an atmosphere of heavy expectancy, the dancers' bodies reveal and transform the inner stresses associated with contemporary living. Yonder: at an indicated distance.

"One of the characteristics of modern man is that he is readily observable by the crowd, from the impression he leaves on many retinas to the trace left on a recording device. His personality is built from his consciousness of his own image, which he assesses and compares to models such as that of the "super hero". It is to this status our two modern, forthright women fervently endeavour to aspire in a desire to excel themselves. They therefore implicitly accept that their great deeds might be held up to scrutiny, judged, and sublimated. For these two women, the enclosed space of the stage is transformed into the ultimate testing place. Like guinea pig volunteers, they submit to an experiment, under the omnipresent gaze of the public.

Dressed in tailored jackets and beanies, our two women advance, determined to overcome any obstacles that might stand in their way. They instinctively lean towards a goal, as all super heroines should. The performance space, like the board in a game in which they might be the pawns, determines their movements. What might they be hoping to achieve?

"I am one of the super heroines on stage. The other is Valentine, against whom I have competed in so many *battles. We both spin on our heads. We are both Eurasian. People often get us confused. They like to compare us, to see us compete against each other. What is expected of us is a performance, and a fighting spirit. The consciousness of those same expectations might well be what shapes the characters of so many men and women, driven by the logic of productivity. I have deliberately subjected our dancers' bodies to an atmosphere of heavy expectancy to compel them to reveal and release the resulting tensions within them."

* Battles: solo or collective improvisation contests.

≡ Choreographer: Anne Nguyen

As a dancer specialized in breakdance and familiar with the world of hip-hop battles, Anne Nguyen founded the par Terre Dance Company in 2005. The scientific thought as well as her practice of several martial arts inspire her to conceive choreographic universes that sublimate the hip-hop dance and its essence. By setting precise gestures, geometrical constraints, energy and density contrasts, intertwining of bodies and dance mechanisms, and unexpected occupations of space, she combines a raw, accomplished hip-hop dance with a graphic, pure, deconstructed choreographic writing. Her choreographic pieces display a complex, precise architecture and alternate between controlled spaces prompting personal interpretations and spaces left to chance, or calling for improvisation, which can be fraught with risks. With architectural geometric declinations in Square Root, uninterrupted flow of dance particles in continual transformation in PROMENADE OBLIGATOIRE, robotic partition of revisited couple dances in bal.exe, games of strategy in pursuit of territory in Autarcie (...), variant of the breakdance in the form of martial arts in Kata, her creations reflect the forms and energies that surround human beings in the contemporary world. They combine poetry and mathematics, sensuality and explosiveness. They explore the links between music and dance, through original musical creations and a reflection on the dancer's relationship to music and time. Through her choreographic creations, Anne Nguyen questions the value given to the observer and the connection between individuals. She likes to create new relationships between the audience and dance, which she implements through hybrid projects like Dance of the city warriors, a course of participative and immersive installations crossing hip-hop dance with the world of video and virtual reality, or with Graphic Cyphers, an immersive choreographic concept for the public space.

Anne Nguyen is currently working with more than thirty hip-hop dancers with different specialities (breakdance, popping and waacking) on her different touring productions, and she herself performs in several of them such as Racine Carrée and Yonder Woman. Anne Nguyen's first production, the solo Square Root (2007) relates the geometry found in breakdance movements to the contemporary urban environment. It combines mathematical dance compositions with some of Anne's poems. The solo won second prize in the Masdanza contemporary choreography competition in 2009. Anne Nguyen also choreographed Keep it Funky! (2007), a celebratory piece devised for six lockers, and Spirit of the Underground (2008), a performance for five dancers and one actress, on the themes of contact and dreams. Her duet Yonder Woman (2010), an "experiment for two superhero women", analyses the notion of performance through a game-play based on linear progress and relationship behaviours. Her 2012 production PROMENADE OBLIGATOIRE is a one-hour walk for eight poppers, who undertake an uninterrupted crossing along the timeline, in an exploration of the different possible states of "being together". In Anne's 2013 production for quartet Autarcie (...), she explores the inner workings of a restless "tribe", with all the power struggles that ensue. In her 2014 production bal.exe, a "mechanical ball set to chamber music" for eight poppers and five classical musicians, robotic dancers engage into a new "mechanical" dance style performed in pairs, called "looping pop". Anne Nguyen staged the duet Lettres à Zerty in 2015 as part of a commission for young audiences by CDC Le Gymnase and CDC Le Cuvier. In October 2016, Anne Nguyen created Dance of the city warriors, an immersive, participatory course of installations centered on hip-hop dance, implementing live video capture and editing interactive video processes and performances danced in situ. In October 2017, Anne Nguyen will stage Kata, a show for eight breakdancers that lends form to the warrior-like energy of breakdance. The movements are decomposed into sequences of linear moves and evolve into genuine fights played. She is planning to stage a new production in 2019.

Yonder Woman

Dancer and choreographer of the par Terre Dance Company, Anne Nguyen is first and foremost a B-girl, specialising in hip-hop floorworks. She has performed with many hip-hop and contemporary dance companies such as Black Blanc Beur, Faustin Linyekula and Salia Ni Seydou. She formed part of the breakdance crews RedMask in Montreal, as well as Phase T, Def Dogz and Créteil Style in Paris, and has taken part in hundreds of battles, either solo or in groups, winning several high-profile competitions, such as IBE 2004 or BOTY 2005. She has served as judge on many others, including BOTY 2006 and Redbull BC One 2007. She makes an appearance in the documentary film Planet B-Boy (2007).

Anne Nguyen also writes poetry, short prose items and articles on dance (Danser magazine, Repères, cahier de danse). Excerpts from her collection of poems, the Manual of the City Warrior, have been published in Graff It! magazine, on which she was chief editor of the dance section. Several pieces performed by the Dance Company incorporate Anne Nguyen's texts, recorded or spoken (Square Root, Spirit of the Underground). Anne teaches hip-hop dance using a method based on postures, on the deconstruction of dance moves and on their subsequent deployment within the performance space. Since 2012, she has taught a technical and theoretical workshop on hip-hop dance at the University of Sciences Po Paris, called Hip-hop, a contemporary culture.

Keen on collaborating and cross-referencing within artistic milieux, Anne Nguyen created in 2014 the piece i as part of the trilogy for six dancers and three choreographers La preuve par l'autre commissioned by the Malka Dance Company. She has also worked as choreographic consultant to Australian choreographer Nick Power, in Sydney, for his 2014 production Cypher.

Anne Nguyen was awarded the 2013 SACD Nouveau Talent Chorégraphie prize and appointed Chevalier de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres in 2015.

With a scientific background, Anne Nguyen puts hip-hop movement through the mill to extract spectacular equations, uncluttered yet always surprising. A love of constraints and a passion to sublimate them: typical Nguyen.

Danser – Thomas Hahn – February 2011 / National monthly magazine

DANSER

"A female breakdancing laboratory, generating surreal, ethereal and cunning legworks. This manner of dissociating limbs to assemble them again upside down is like a Picasso set to dance. [...] a new architecture, as suggestive as it is joyful, as mischievous as it is surgically precise. Another form of breakdancing has been made possible!"

Tanz – Thomas Hahn – December 2010 (Germany) / National monthly magazine

tanz

"Anne Nguyen gives a brand new face to powermoves [...], dismantling series of moves and reconstructing them. Circles are turned into linear courses, right angles and interrupted trajectories. Thus is created a lively modular system, a blend of breakdance and contact dance which dissolves the body's natural order, like in Pablo Picasso. Anne Nguyen applies the principle to legworks. Paradoxically, with her, it looks natural."

Danser – Thomas Hahn – December 2010 / National monthly magazine

DANSER

"Anne Nguyen develops and hones her research into the vocabulary of breakdance "as if in a laboratory": breaking down circles and replacing them with straight lines and right angles, while imbricating bodies according to strict geometrical principles. Thus, Anne Nguyen gives life to two kobolds; they could almost be sisters, or friends, slightly childlike and impish. In this danced animation, they are discovering the world and can act, head on the ground and feet in the air, as if they walked like this every day. Is woman the future of hip-hop?"

Yonder Woman

Télérama Sortir – Rosita Boisseau – October 27th, 2010 & December 8th, 2010
/ National weekly agenda

"Of course, "Yonder Woman" is "Wonder Woman", with all the clichés that go with it: beauty, strength, efficiency and all the rest. Anne Nguyen and Valentine Nagata-Ramos, hip hop choreographers and breakdance experts, take stereotypes and run them through the mill to give us new images of modern women. Neither dolls, nor sex bombs, neither warrioresses nor super heroines, but a little bit of everything, and above all, they are determined, even in their vulnerability."

Radio Pluriel – La petite chronique de Mo – Monique Desgouttes-Rouby
– October 20th, 2010 / Regional Radio Channel

"Yonder Woman requires [...] the public's collaboration, prompting it [...] to examine the stage through a microscope. Before our eyes, two laboratory guinea pigs turn in circles, observing each other. Trapped by an oppressive determinism, Anne Nguyen and Valentine Nagata-Ramos battle it out with each other and finally, as one, rid themselves of their chains. From this simple argument there emerges a wonderful dance of life. We could almost be witnessing the birth of energy itself. A liberating piece."

≡ The Superhero Assault Course Collective performance based on Yonder Woman

This 15 to 30 minutes long adaptable performance can easily be the first part of the show in tour. It involves amateur dancers trained through workshops.

The Superhero Assault Course is a performance putting the Yonder Woman piece (experiment for two superhero women) into prospect. Based around clear principles, betting on the notions of game, competition and assault course, The Superhero Assault Course is a choreographic path along which the performers, following simple directives opened to improvisation, can change at each performance. Every night, four dancers selected among the apprentices in order to participate to this type of battle are put in competition for the « Superhero » title. They attend dance tests during which their various capacities are evaluated under the audience's eye, which chooses the winner. The other apprentices assist in the tests and the stage direction through different constrained improvisations.

The Superhero Assault Course has already been created in 2011 with 25 sixth grade students as part of a departmental school program. Four performances took place in May 2011 at l'étoile du Nord theatre (Paris).

≡ Workshops based on Yonder Woman

Sessions are divided in two. A technical approach as a start, based on postures, balance and reflexes through upright or floor exercises within space and with the help of a barre built from broken down hip hop movements. The second time focuses on a choreographic composition related to various principles approached in Yonder Woman (lines, contact, performance...).

Before the show, a discussion around the notion of superhero and a collective performance based on Yonder Woman can be organized.
